

Invitation to tender

This ITT is to fund a study that will co-produce the refinement of a framework and survey tools to measure children's outcomes following private law proceedings, and pilot them with children and their carers, ideally who have been through private law proceedings.

1. Background to the Nuffield Family Justice Observatory

The Nuffield Family Justice Observatory was set up by the Nuffield Foundation to find and fill the gaps in understanding about the family justice system in England and Wales, highlight the areas where change will have the biggest impact and foster collaboration to make that change happen. A bridge between the academic community and frontline practitioners, the Nuffield FJO is an independent and resolutely focused on improving outcomes for children and families by improving the use of data and research evidence in decision-making.

2. This Research Study

Currently, there are no measures for the outcomes of children in private law. Children and young people have told Nuffield FJO that they want others to know and care about their outcomes and subjective wellbeing. Recent publications including the National Audit Office's report have highlighted that private law is often assessed by the efficiency of cases, rather than by outcomes. This ITT is for a study to build off existing frameworks to refine a survey tool, or set of tools, for measuring children's outcomes following private law proceedings, that could be practically used in any future data collection exercises for private law cases.

3. Focus and scope of the feasibility study

There are lots of existing frameworks to measure children's outcomes when they have experienced family adversity or separation. In designing an outcomes framework for this project, we do not want the team to start from scratch. We expect the research team to learn from existing frameworks and from reliable, validated, tools to measure outcomes for children and young people. In their development of the outcomes framework, it may be appropriate to lift a framework/set of frameworks as a starting point for testing what outcomes matter with young people. We have done a scoping exercise, looking at existing frameworks and survey tools and engaging with thought leaders in relevant applied children's outcomes research. We expect the team to build off the existing work, particularly Bright Spots Survey from Coram Voice.

We are looking for a research team to work with children and young people, to test existing outcomes frameworks and co-produce an outcomes measurement framework and survey tools to collect data on these children's outcomes, from both parents/carers and children. We are interested in outcomes in a broad sense – including multiple aspects of wellbeing and life satisfaction including self-esteem, positive relationships and happiness.

The aims are to:

- Explore existing frameworks and co-produce the refinement of an existing outcomes survey tools or tools with children and young people that can be used to gain an understanding of a child's view of their life post-proceedings to include:
  - The child's wellbeing
  - Their satisfaction with the relationship with the parents, siblings, and individuals who matter to them
  - Other relevant outcomes children feel are important to describe their lives e.g., education, health, activities that interest them
- Refine or develop survey tool(s) that can be administered to parents/carers to understand their view of their child/children's life/lives post-proceedings
- Pilot the survey tools with a group of children and young people and parents/carers, ideally those who have been through private proceedings.

Measuring Children's Outcomes and "Wellbeing"

A number of common outcomes frameworks have been developed within children's services and policy, and they tend to focus on broadly similar domains: health and wellbeing, education, development, relationships, and safety or stability. However, there is considerable variation in how outcomes are conceptualised, measured, and interpreted. Two of the relevant frameworks for children in private law include the Bright Spots Wellbeing framework and the Common outcomes framework for children.

Wellbeing is a multidimensional concept as outlined in Ruggeri et al. 2020 which define wellbeing as "the combination of feeling good and functioning well; the experience of positive emotions such as happiness and contentment as well as the development of one's potential, having some control over one's life, having a sense of purpose, and experiencing positive relationships". There are numerous wellbeing measures capturing varied dimensions including life satisfaction/happiness, positive relationships, self-esteem, optimism, resilience etc. (see Huppert et al. 2009). We would like the outcomes framework to capture how safe children feel.

In the context of measuring wellbeing of children, there are many tools that have been co-produced for various cohorts of children and young people including Coram Voice's Bright Spots programme that has a number of surveys to measure children and young people's wellbeing in care and after care. The Beewell programme developed by the University of Manchester, The Gregson Family Foundation and Anna Freud, includes a survey to measure wellbeing of children in the Greater Manchester area to encourage action to improve wellbeing. There are also a number of more generalised existing tools that focus on children's wellbeing, and cover similar ground to outcomes frameworks; ONS wellbeing measures (4 questions that are used in the Annual Population Survey and the Millenium Cohort Study), the Children's Society Good Childhood reports (2016) and the Children's Worlds survey (www.isciweb.org/) each have 10 domains through which they measure wellbeing. The domains are: Family, Home, Friends, Choice, Health, Appearance, Time Use/Leisure, Money and Things, Future, and School. For a more specific focus on wellbeing and mental health, there are resources available from the Child Outcomes Research Consortium directory.

Involvement of young people

We expect this feasibility study to include direct engagement with children and young people involved in private law proceedings to explore the relevance of existing frameworks and measurement tools and understand what aspects of wellbeing matter to them. This work will help improve the family justice system's overall understanding of the views and experiences of children and families after private law proceedings are complete and will be an important step to improving children's voices being heard.

Longer-term goal

This feasibility study will assess the options for collecting data about children's outcomes from parents/carers and children who have been involved in private law proceedings. The longer-term goal is to test a tool or set of survey tools that could ultimately be administered on a larger scale – ideally at the system level.

This feasibility study is focused on the content of what outcomes should be measured and design and testing surveys of relevant indicators with children and young people and the acceptability of these measures and of answering these questions.

We commissioned separate work on how the family justice system could operationalise data collection at large-scale, and researchers should build in some time to engage with the research findings from this.

Future project

We envisage a future project which would test the outcomes measurement tools being embedded in the family justice system – i.e., professionals in the family justice system potentially being part of the process of identifying suitable participants, or testing an opt-out option for recruitment. The embedding of the measures and feasibility of data collection is beyond this project.

Support from the NFJO

Staff at the NFJO will be available to provide support throughout the project, e.g. connecting the research team with the Family Justice Young People's Board. We will expect to meet at least monthly in short meetings to check in, but support is available on an ongoing basis.

4. Tender Requirements

Tenders should set out a proposed methodology and key research questions.

i. Areas of interest

Areas of particular interest that need to be addressed include:

- What outcomes should be captured to get a broad, holistic view about children's and young people's lives following private law proceedings? This should be informed by children and young people's views and existing outcomes frameworks.
- As part of measuring outcomes, what was the wellbeing of children post-proceedings and what components of wellbeing should be measured? Again, this should be informed by children and young people's views and existing frameworks.
- What data collections tools would be appropriate to collect information on these outcomes? Ensuring these are age-appropriate and language and length is appropriate.

Ideally there would be some questions included in survey tools that are comparable to existing wellbeing surveys of the general population, that could then be used as a comparison group in analysis.

ii. Methodology

This research is expected to build off existing research and involve a level of participatory research. Applicants should propose a suitable methodology for refining an outcomes framework and creating survey tools – that involves collaborating with children and young people with lived experience in both design and testing. This should build on the existing evidence base about measuring children's outcomes. The tools should be age appropriate.

The tender response should include information about how children and young people will be engaged in the study. We expect the study to include a range of experiences of young people and families. It is important to us that this study captures the experience of families with a diversity of family structures, from ethnic minority backgrounds, parents with learning needs, and children with special educational needs and disabilities, and we will look for a clear exposition of how the research team intends to look for respondents with diverse backgrounds.

iii. Research Infrastructure and support

Applicants must consider the safeguarding and ethical elements of their methodology closely. Potential risks and issues and how they will be addressed should be set out clearly in tenders, including thoughts about how appropriate consent for the young people will be sought, as well as any support that may be required. We also expect reference to ensuring data protection and storage protocols.

Ethics

We expect proposals to address ethical requirements in their application. This could include engagement with a recognised university-based ethics process. If such a process is not available to the applicants, we would be open to exploring how the NFJO might facilitate an ethical review. In any event, we expect all proposals to clearly set out how they will ensure their approach is ethically sound. Full funding of the project will be contingent on successful completion of an agreed ethics process.

iv. Outputs

Expected outputs include:

- An outcomes framework co-designed with children and young people with lived experience of private law proceedings. The framework should give context about what matters to children and young people in shaping how they are feeling, and showing what parts of their lives are going well or not.
- Pilot survey tools for children and young people to capture their outcomes.
- A pilot survey or other appropriate data collection tool for parents/carers to capture their children's outcomes.
- Final versions of all surveys or data collection tool(s)
- A final report outlining the results from the survey tools piloted with a group of children and young people, and parents/carers, including a discussion about what could be improved if the exercise is repeated in the future. This must be concise and written in accessible language.

v. Project management and publication

We will setup regular update meetings, e.g., monthly catch ups, on project progress including any emerging findings.

The final report will be published on the Nuffield FJO website. In addition, Nuffield FJO may produce a short summary, drawing on the findings, intended for decision-makers in the family justice system.

In the interest of accessibility and as part of our commitment to equity, diversity and inclusion, we encourage authors to follow the below guidelines:

- Write in short, clear sentences and paragraphs.
- Avoid using unnecessarily complex words and phrases.
- Make content unambiguous.
- Expand acronyms on first use. For example, the Ministry of Justice (MoJ).
- Consider providing a glossary for terms readers may not know.
- Use list formatting as appropriate.
- Use short blocks of text.

- Consider using images, illustrations, video, audio, and symbols to help clarify meaning.
- Complex diagrams will require a text description that can be used as an alt text tag on images for screen readers.
- Use inclusive language. We will provide a NFJO style guide for further information.

vi. Budget, timescales, and milestones

We envisage this project to cost circa £40-60,000 inclusive of both VAT and all expenses. We are open to some discussions on the budget.

Payments will be released in stages alongside agreed milestones, providing these have been met. We suggest the following structure for payments:

- 50% following contract signing;
- 50% following NFJO sign-off on final report.

The contractual milestones shall be clearly documented in any contract entered into as a result of this ITT. The successful tender applicant will be expected to sign a services agreement with Nuffield Family Justice Observatory.

5. Indicative timetable

Set out below is the procurement and approximate delivery timetable. We appreciate the procurement timescales set out may be shorter than for many tenders, but we are keen the project gets under way swiftly.
